As leaders on education, government policy, communication and industry initiatives, which affect all their members, they continue to build on those fundamentals, while providing endless opportunities to network and foster new impactful relationships. “When I transitioned from residential to commercial property management in 1990, one of the first things I did was get involved with BOMA. The educational sessions and publications provided valuable information to help me learn and stay relevant; and the networking events connected me with other industry professionals and great vendors that I still use to this day. Participating on the Board of Directors and the Executive (and becoming the first female President of BOMA BC) provided me with valuable leadership experience and the confidence to take on bigger challenges in my career. Being involved in BOMA has definitely been a very positive experience.”

BOMA staff work hard to ensure the events are dynamic and offer solid networking opportunities.”
